

The final exam will be structured in the following manner: 30 multiple choice questions (2pts each) and 2 essay questions (20pts each). (You will have four essays questions from which you must answer two.) In general, the exam will focus on guiding principles discussed in class and the readings (i.e., “conformity”, “social psychology”, “persuasion”, etc.) but there are also questions that refer to specific studies. That said, I will not ask you to recall specific results of studies but rather, general findings, such as: factors that increase or decrease conformity, variables that impact human aggression, etc. On a final note, as you review the syllabus and class lectures I recommend that you carefully think about the main argument, and supporting evidence, for each individual reading. This will help you prepare for the essay questions but should also prepare you to answer the multiple choice questions.
