SPECIALIZATION

In the classroom, I aim to spur innovative thinking. To this end, I am a firm believer in experiential learning and community-based experiences. As an educator, I have facilitated community-based learning experiences in the US, and Latin America. I have also taught a wide range of courses, including poverty and inequality, social problems, and international migration. In each of my classes I incorporate a regional focus on the borderlands of the Southwest and Latin American.

My research and writing focuses on the intersection of international immigration with development and crime in Latin America and the United States. I currently have two principle research projects. The first addresses the social, cultural, and economic effects of international migration and crime on migrant-sending regions in Mexico. The second analyzes the impact of return migration on criminal activity in contemporary Latin American society. Together, these projects have aided me in thinking about the relationship between economic inequality and crime in the 21st century.

EXPERT WITNESS AND MIGRANT DECLARTIONS

Expert Witness

Beginning in 2018, I started aiding asylum cases across the country as an expert witness for cases from Latin America before the Executive Office for Immigration Review. To date, I have worked on cases with clients from Peru, Colombia, Venezuela, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Mexico. Thus far, I've served on 250 cases in judicial districts ranging from Seattle to Philadelphia.

Declarations

Since 2020, I've worked with multiple law firms and NGOs with the purpose of helping their clients develop clear, concise, and coherent personal declarations for their asylum cases. To date, I've drafted 265 migrant declarations.
